Have your say on potential shark barrier for Middleton Beach

The City of Albany is encouraging the community to have a say on a potential shark barrier enclosure which has been proposed for Middleton Beach.

The City is currently conducting a feasibility study and community consultation into the possible installation of a shark barrier at the popular swimming spot.

An online survey and information sheet is now available at www.albany.wa.gov.au.

In July, the State Government offered funding for the installation of a shark enclosure at the popular Albany beach. Albany City Council subsequently resolved to conduct community consultation and a feasibility study before committing to the project.

Once the feasibility study and community consultation is complete, at a future meeting, Council will consider whether to commit to a shark barrier at Middleton Beach.

If Council went ahead with the proposal, the intention would be to trial the shark barrier this summer, however this would depend on relevant approvals.
